'Manchester is a place for individuals, brilliant kids who like to do their own thing... and if you are ready it will release you to do the same...'

With a distinguished history of academic achievement and an ambitious agenda for the future, The University of Manchester offers you a highly reputable learning experience, rooted in a rich educational heritage and boosted by cutting-edge research and innovation – all at the heart of one of the world's most vibrant cities.

the university

Part of the prestigious Russell Group of universities, Manchester has much to offer you. As well as the outstanding facilities, resources and opportunities found within an institution of this calibre, the University is highly respected amongst academic and business communities alike – a respect that is conferred upon its graduates.

Innovative

Our tradition of success in learning and research stretches back over 180 years, encompassing the birth of the modern computer, the splitting of the atom and the founding principles of present-day economics. All these and many more world-changing innovations have their roots here, at The University of Manchester.

Rated third in the UK in terms of 'research power' in the last Research Assessment Exercise, today we enjoy a global reputation for our pioneering research, which informs our problem-based approach to undergraduate learning.

Internationally renowned

Since 2005, the University has risen in the influential Academic Ranking of World Universities Survey conducted by Shanghai Jiao-Tong University, from 53rd to 44th in the world, and ninth in Europe – confirming us as a progressive and world-class teaching and research institution.

Our campus is home to more than 37,000 students from around 150 countries, creating a diverse and inclusive multicultural community.

Ambitious

Our mission is to become one of the top 25 universities in the world by 2015 and the preferred destination for the best teachers, researchers and students.

It's a goal that we're well on the way to achieving, backed by a multimillion-pound investment programme in facilities, staff and buildings. This includes a virtual learning environment that offers you flexible access to study resources 24/7, and the Alan Gilbert Learning Commons, a brand new £30 million resource centre for students (opened in 2012).

Distinguished

More than 5,600 academic and research staff – many leaders in their fields, with international reputations – provide stimulating learning environments and excellent standards of teaching.

As a Manchester graduate, you will join a prestigious hall of fame, including 25 Nobel Prize winners among our current and former staff and students. We have more Nobel Prize winners on our current staff than any other UK university.

Sought after by employers

Employers actively target University of Manchester graduates, giving you excellent job prospects.

Our worldwide community of 240,000 graduates can be found in top positions in every imaginable field, including Sir Terry Leahy, former chief executive of Tesco; former Secretary General of Amnesty International Irene Khan; writer/performer Meera Syal and author Louis de Bernieres.

Full of opportunity

You can take advantage of countless exciting personal development opportunities at Manchester, including career development programmes run by a university careers service that has consistently been voted the best in the UK by graduate recruiters.

Choose The University of Manchester and you will join one of Britain's most forward-thinking universities, which builds on its success year on year – and invites you to do the same.

religions and theology at manchester

There are two key reasons for you to come to Manchester. First, we are officially one of the best universities in this country for studying religions and theology. Second, we offer you a wide and varied range of courses to choose from.

Official rankings of quality

Every few years, all disciplines in each university in the country are assessed for the level and impact of their research. We have a top research team here, including many who are known internationally for their work, and many who have written the key textbooks in this area. This was tested by an independent committee in 1996 and 2001, when Religions and Theology was awarded a 5*, which translates as "internationally renowned". We were the only university in the country to maintain the 5* twice in a row – and we are delighted to report that we were once again ranked among the elite departments in the new-style Research Assessment Exercise in 2008.

In 2001, every religions and theology department in each university in the country was assessed for the quality of its teaching of the subject. Religions and Theology at Manchester achieved the maximum mark (24). Only three achieved that top mark, and only Manchester achieved top grades for both research and teaching.

Unrivalled variety of courses

We offer an impressively wide range and variety of courses – more so than any other British university. You can take units in ancient Hebrew, Greek, or Sanskrit, learn about Hindu, Buddhist, Jewish and Islamic traditions, pursue an interest in the Bible or Christian theology, or discover the different approaches to religion offered by sociology, anthropology and philosophy. These are all supported by the resources of our John Rylands University Library, one of the best academic libraries in the country.

Welcoming community

A final reason for choosing Religions and Theology at Manchester is the friendly atmosphere and great relationship between staff and students. Come for a visit and see for yourself.

Manchester offers you...

- One of the UK's highest international reputation for research in religion and theology, which informs all our taught courses
- An impressive range and variety of subject areas to choose from
- Access to one of the UK's major university libraries, with a fabulous collection of books and archives in the areas of religion and theology

Student views

"There is lots of freedom to study what you want to study and to pick units outside of the subject area."

Patrick Daly, third-year student

"Particularly in the core course, having a smaller group was an ideal way to meet people and manage smaller group tasks. The atmosphere is generally more informal and it is easier to ask questions and ensure better understanding."

Scott Hunt, first-year student

"Small-group teaching is excellent in giving one the space to explore ideas in depth and share knowledge at a more-than-superficial level."

David Few, third-year student

"Feedback on coursework is useful and lecturers make the effort to write helpful comments."

Judy Scholes, third-year student

Study resources and facilities

The John Rylands University Library is one of the largest academic libraries in the UK, which boasts a fabulous collection of books and archives in the areas of religion and theology. It offers a wide range of printed books and periodicals, a comprehensive collection of textbooks and scholarly publications, and important manuscript collections. The Library also offers comprehensive access to specialised online and electronic resources and databases.

PCs for student use are found in clusters all around campus, in halls of residence and around the lecture rooms.

Personal support

You have an academic adviser, who usually works with you from the first year through to the third, helping you to become integrated into the learning experience on offer here. You also have a student mentor, usually from the year above you, who can offer advice and support with regard to the student experience more generally.

The University has an excellent Central Support and Advisory Service, and your academic adviser can put you in touch with them. In addition, the student body elects its own representatives to sit on the main committees and to raise matters that concern students, and put forward their views.

We encourage informal and relaxed relations between teaching staff and students, so no-one is afraid to ask questions and make the most basic of enquiries. This makes for a flourishing community, an academic culture that is committed to developing your intellectual potential, interests and curiosities.

Study abroad for one semester

You have the opportunity to study abroad for one semester (in your second year of studies) at a partner university in Europe, Australia, Canada, Hong Kong, Singapore, or the USA. For more information, email goabroad@manchester.ac.uk, or visit the Study Abroad website:

www.manchester.ac.uk/ug/studyabroad

Career prospects

Your job prospects are obviously crucial in your decision about which degree to take and we are very keen to make you employable. The courses are carefully designed to help you learn the necessary study skills and transferable skills by the end of your studies. These skills range from those associated with information technology and presentation (both oral and written), to those associated with research and communication.

More employers recruit from The University of Manchester than from any other university. It is the most targeted by the top 100 employers, followed by London, Warwick, Cambridge and Oxford.

Careers chosen by graduates in Religions and Theology include teaching in schools and colleges, broadcasting and print journalism, banking, publishing, legal, personnel, public sector professions, Civil Service, work within religious organisations, Non-Governmental Organisations (NGOs) and many others.

BA (Hons) Study of Religions and Theology

Our BA degree in the Study of Religions and Theology is very carefully titled. It focuses on the facts and challenges of diversity and pluralism in many different religions, at the same time taking seriously the profound questions of ancient, medieval, modern and postmodern debates on theological matters in all those religions.

This makes our degree unique in the UK, as it combines a very wide range of religious areas – from religion in the postmodern city, to ancient Buddhism and Zoroastrianism – with a great variety of approaches. We are interested in the widest interpretation of religion at a time when the world is taking religious difference very seriously. We make the strange familiar, and the familiar strange.

We have scholars of international standing who are linguists; anthropologists; theologians of several religions; literature and mysticism; philosophers; historians; and critical theorists. Your range of choices is therefore very wide, with course units taught by experts in their fields. You will find that you are hearing ideas that come straight out of your lecturers' research, some of which may not yet have been published, or which are hot off the press.

Our introductory core course unit in the first year introduces you to the fundamentals for many of the areas of our expertise, including the various theories and methods currently being used in the subject area (eg literary, historical, social, scientific and feminist approaches).

Approaches and themes

Many of our students find that they are interested in certain approaches to the study of religion, or in specific religious or theological themes. While you can choose whichever course units interest you most, it is worth saying something here about those areas of study that are particularly well represented here.

The implications of religion for an understanding of society (and vice versa)

You could draw upon the interdisciplinary approaches of sociology, anthropology and politics. You might explore a very wide range of different religious traditions and approaches to the study of religion, or spend a lot of time on a single system, or a particular kind of religious phenomenon.

Relevant course units might include:

- Myth – Conceptions and Understandings
- Evolution and Religion
- The Rise of Christianity
- Introduction to Muslim Societies
- Religion, Culture and Gender
- Women in Middle Eastern Societies
- European Reformations
- Women and Men in Indian Traditions
- Christianity, Culture and Society in England 1750-2000
- From Religion to Politics
- Radical Theologies
- The Arab World and the West

The religions of South Asia

This territory includes India, Pakistan, Bangladesh, Sri Lanka, Nepal, Bhutan and the Maldives, home to about a quarter of the world's population – that's close to 1.5 billion people. There are also significant South Asian migrant populations across the globe, including, of course, in Britain. The cultures and religious traditions of this region, and their impact on social, economic and political life, are therefore issues with truly global implications.

You might want to explore popular practice and scholarly texts, the politics of religious nationalism and colonialism and the goals of religious asceticism. You might like to examine Hindu, Sikh, Buddhist and Islamic traditions in South Asia, and the interactions that have taken place between these traditions.

Relevant course units might include:

- Religion in Modern South Asian History
- The World of Buddhism
- Islamic Philosophy
- Introduction to Spoken Hindi/Urdu
- Texts, Ritual and Practices in Mahayana Buddhism
- Religion and Conflict in Late Colonial India
- Sanskrit/ Pali
- Women and Men in Indian Traditions
- Indian Philosophy
- Ethnic Minorities in Britain

course details

Biblical studies

This would involve not only the study of the texts of the Hebrew Bible and the New Testament, and the contexts from which they emerged, but also other related texts, such as the Dead Sea Scrolls. It's an exciting opportunity to study some of the most influential traditions in the history of civilization, in an entirely open way.

The Bible is one of the most widely read books – or collection of books – ever written. It has inspired numerous works of art and literature, music and drama. It has had a profound effect on history and culture, ethics and legal systems. It has motivated countless people in a variety of ways, not least because it contains the sacred texts of two of the world's major religions, Judaism and Christianity.

If you'd like to learn both biblical languages, we allow the first-year course unit in either Greek or Hebrew to be taken in the second year; this policy permits you to study both languages without the heavy burden of taking both of the first-year units simultaneously.

Relevant course units might include:

- Greek
- Hebrew
- New Testament – Text and Context
- Dead Sea Scrolls
- Gnosticism in Antiquity
- Luke/Acts
- Ethical Issues from Joshua to Jesus
- Theology and Ethics of Paul
- World of the Ancient Israelites

Jewish studies

This would involve study of Jewish religion, history and culture, and on the central issues affecting contemporary Jews. You might learn about the experiences of the Jewish people, and about the interactions between its traditions and those of their neighbours.

Relevant course units might include:

- Introduction to Judaism
- Jews in Europe
- The History of Jewish-Christian Relations
- Hebrew (Biblical, medieval, modern)
- Introduction to Holocaust Studies
- Jewish-Christian-Muslim Controversies
- Consequences of the Holocaust
- Holocaust Theology
- Biblical Hebrew Texts
- Early Jewish Novels

Course structure

Year 1

- Core course module, which is designed to introduce you to key thinkers in a wide range of religious traditions (eg Augustine, Luther, Maimonides, Gandhi), to familiarise you with the variety of approaches to the study of religions and theology, and to provide you with an overview of the history of the discipline, including the work of theorists such as Weber and Durkheim.
- Five 'free choice' course units that will tend to be introductory in nature and quite broad in scope

Year 2

- Six free choices, which will be slightly more focused in their topics and will draw together different themes and approaches in innovative ways

Year 3

- Four 'free choice' course units that are very specialised
- A dissertation, a substantial piece of independent research, produced under the supervision of one of your lecturers

We teach in large and small groups, but always interactively. You have the full range of all the course units to choose from, and are even welcome to take up to two units a year from other subject areas such as History, Classics, or English. You can pick and mix as you see fit to create a unique degree programme that suits your own needs and interests.

Skills development

By the end of your studies, you will have acquired valuable general skills that equip you to succeed in a variety of contexts.

1. You will become familiar with a variety of religious traditions and theological perspectives.
2. With your study of methodical issues and your theoretically informed reading and analysis of a wide variety of texts, you will significantly enhance your alertness to the workings of power, authority, argument and ideology (both in religious and nonreligious guises).
3. By successfully completing this degree you will acquire a wide-ranging understanding of contemporary and past religious, social and cultural developments, and an awareness of how issues of politics, scholarly methodology and religious interpretation tend to intersect, especially in the field of religious studies.
4. By reading examples of some of the most influential and aesthetically powerful documents ever written, as well as offering presentations and writing many pieces of your own, you will acquire excellent communication skills (both written and oral).

BA (Hons) Theological Studies in Philosophy and Ethics

This three-year course focuses on theology as it impacts on philosophy and ethics. You will study 20th-century continental philosophy and Christian theology, and will have a chance to consider their relation to Indian, Jewish and Islamic philosophies. It is designed to map on to the kind of topics that many students first meet in their A-level in Religious Studies, which often emphasises philosophy and ethics, and to take these interests further and into new areas.

The course is far more interdisciplinary than is offered elsewhere, and allows you to explore just how interrelated are theology, philosophy and ethics. While others offer an 'ethics' supplement to theology and philosophy, unique to Manchester is the way 'ethics' is related more generally to social ethics and politics.

Among other things, you will explore theological perspectives on the place of religions in today's society and the philosophical and ethical issues that are raised thereby, consider questions that relate to suffering and evil, investigate the complicated relationship between scientific and religious world views and evaluate philosophies and theologies in Western religious traditions.

Course content

A sample of relevant course units might include:

- Existentialism
- Introduction to the History of Philosophy
- Introduction to Christian Theology
- Islamic philosophy
- Problems in the Philosophy of Religion: Evil
- Indian Philosophy
- From Religion To Politics
- Holocaust Theology
- Radical Theologies
- Ethical Issues from Joshua to Jesus
- Theology and Ethics of Paul

You are also encouraged to draw on a selection of units offered by the Philosophy and Politics departments, among others.

Your choices are not restricted to those units that relate directly to theology, philosophy, or ethics; each year you will be given the opportunity to explore other topics, too.

In your third year, you will write a dissertation that draws together what you have learned from theological studies in philosophy and ethics, under the supervision of a member of the teaching staff.

BA (Hons) Comparative Religion and Social Anthropology (Joint Honours)

This course possesses a strongly interdisciplinary flavour. Although the disciplines of comparative religion and social anthropology indisputably differ from one another in a variety of ways, scholars and students in each area recognise the existence of an interface between the two. Increasingly, for instance, scholars of religion use anthropological concepts and tools to formulate and approach questions pertaining to religious phenomena, while religious ritual and magico-religious practices have long been standard topics in the research of anthropologists.

Our course allows you to work both in those areas where the two disciplines fruitfully come together (eg Anthropology of Religion) and in those where their interaction is less direct (eg the Politics of Contemporary Global Issues). Through the Granada Centre for Visual Anthropology, you will also have opportunities to study ethnographic film and video.

Course structure

Year 1

You will take:

- Core course unit in the Study of Religions and Theology
- Two other course units from a set of options in Religion (eg Introduction to Muslim Studies; World of Buddhism)
- Three units in Social Anthropology (ie Regional Studies of Culture, Culture and Power, Cultural Diversity in Global Perspective)

You will be introduced to the challenge of understanding human diversity alongside an evaluation of some of the developments such as cultural imperialism, which might seem to challenge potential diversity.

You will look at some of the key concepts and approaches to understanding culture, especially in relation to questions of power and inequality, including topics such as nationalism, refugees and gender.

You will also have the opportunity to study different regions of the world in some depth, such as Central Asia, India, Japan and Papua New Guinea.

Year 2

You will take:

- Core course unit in Social Anthropology: Anthropology of Religion

You will choose five further course units, of which:

- Three units are in Religion, chosen from a list (including, among others, Women in Middle East Societies; Mahayana Buddhism; Story-Telling in Indian Traditions)
- Two units from Social Anthropology (such as Kinship and Social Life; Political and Social Anthropology)

You will explore a wide range of different religious beliefs and practices, as well as questions about how these should be understood. You will consider various ways of organising and governing societies and their economic relations, and think about how to understand exchange and human motivation, inequalities and some of the changes included under the label of 'globalisation'.

Year 3

This year consists of:

- A dissertation that relates to both religion and anthropology under the supervision of a member of the teaching staff from each discipline
- Four additional course units, to be split equally between the wide range of options available at level three in Religion (eg South Asian Diasporas; Consequences of the Holocaust)

School of Arts, Languages and Cultures

The newly formed School of Arts, Languages and Cultures is the largest grouping of arts, languages and humanities scholars in the UK. It is home to some 6500 students, of which about 1000 are postgraduates, and around 350 academic staff working at the forefront of seventeen disciplines:

- Archaeology
- Art History and Visual Studies
- Classics and Ancient History
- Drama
- East Asian Studies
- English and American Studies
- French Studies
- German Studies
- Linguistics and English Language
- History
- Italian Studies
- Middle Eastern Studies
- Music
- Religions and Theology
- Russian and East European Studies
- Spanish, Portuguese and Latin American Studies
- Translation and Intercultural Studies
- The School is also home to the University Language Centre

The School's interests are in the fields of human cultures, beliefs, institutions and languages (from the most widely spoken global languages to those which are endangered). Its work embraces the material, visual, linguistic, textual, social and performative dimensions of human society past and present, and as such fosters a rich interdisciplinary culture led by world-renowned scholars with a diversity of expertise, from analysts to creative artists, from formal linguists to cultural critics, from historians to cultural theorists.

The units which make up the School have an outstanding research profile as demonstrated by the fact that two of those units were ranked top in their subject area in the UK, following the results of the government's Research Assessment Exercise in 2008, and a further two were ranked in the top 3. Overall, more than 50% of our research was rated 'world leading' or 'internationally excellent'. Our commitment to research enriches our teaching, by bringing renowned international speakers to the School and sustaining a culture of research seminars, workshops and conferences – many of which are open to undergraduate students. It also ensures that our curriculum is continually refreshed.

Our programmes are designed to teach people how to think, and our students tell us they find them challenging and rewarding, as well as good preparation for careers or further study. The student experience combines the advantages of belonging to a specific subject community with the extensive choice that a large and diverse School can offer. We use a wide range of teaching methods, both traditional and innovative. These include lectures, small-group seminars, and tutorials as well as various on-line activities which draw on the latest technology.

We strive to integrate work-related skills and experience into our degree programmes, and we encourage our students to think about and develop their career interests, aims and abilities, through both academic and extra-curricular activities. Our award-winning Careers Service will work in partnership with you throughout your degree to improve your employability and prepare for the competitive jobs market.

Research and teaching in the School of Arts, Languages and Cultures are supported by rich resources within the University. These include the John Rylands University Library, with its unique Special Collections housed in the refurbished Deansgate building; the University Language Centre, with its own language multi-media resource library; the Race Relations Archive; the Manchester Museum; the Whitworth Art Gallery, as well as other distinguished Manchester archives and museums. Other cultural assets at the University of Manchester include the Martin Harris Centre for Music and Drama, Jodrell Bank Observatory, and, new for 2012, the Alan Gilbert Learning Commons.

We maintain a network of partners in research training that involves a wide range of major cultural institutions across the North West. The University and the city also offer superb facilities for almost any academic or recreational interests you might wish to pursue. High profile festivals are a major part of Manchester's cultural life, and the School is involved in many of these, including the Manchester Literature Festival, Manchester Histories Festival and Manchester International Festival. In addition, our undergraduates organise a wide range of cultural activities including, for example, an annual foreign language theatre festival – "Palaver" – at the Contact Theatre.

The School has a strong interdisciplinary orientation and houses the Centre for Interdisciplinary Research in the Arts (CIDRA).

Conclusion

The new School of Arts, Languages and Cultures is determined to become a global beacon for the study of Arts and Languages. Our objective is to create a top quality educational environment within which all our students will thrive. We have a strong commitment to social responsibility and public engagement. We want our graduates not only to be highly sought after by employers but also ready to play a constructive role as citizens in wider society. Through our research we seek to create and develop knowledge that makes a difference in the world; through our teaching we want to inspire our students to achieve their full human potential.
