Criminology at Manchester

Criminology teaching at Manchester has a distinguished history, with courses in crime, policing and criminal justice being offered since the 1970s. The tradition of Manchester Criminology has always included rigorous and critical analysis, empirical research and an engagement with 'real world' problems.

If you choose to study with us you will be taught by some of the UK's leading experts in criminological research in the Centre for Criminology and Criminal Justice (CCCJ), based in Manchester University's Law School. The Centre is a thriving and internationally recognised hub of teaching and research and is home to 15 dedicated criminologists using a range of social science methods in studying many aspects of crime and criminal justice. Our teaching is inspired by our research, ensuring that our students engage in the most current debates in this constantly developing discipline. In recent years CCCJ staff have been at the forefront of research on a diverse range of subjects including drug use and policy, hate crime and other forms of violence, policing and security gangs, criminal law and justice, comparative criminal justice, migration and people trafficking, and gender and crime.

The University of Manchester, the Law School and the Centre work together to provide a welcoming and stimulating academic environment in which to study. The range of academic support, social opportunities and dedicated careers advice on offer makes Criminology at The University of Manchester a highly sought after choice. Our existing students rank us highly, with our BA course in Criminology scoring 100% for student satisfaction in the 2012 National Student Survey.

Criminology BA (Hons) 3yrs

UCAS Code M901

Our Criminology course will give you a broad understanding of crime as a dominant social problem and allow you to explore explanations for criminal behaviour and society's responses to it, including preventative efforts involving the public, politicians, the police and the criminal justice system.

The core course units in your first year provide a thorough grounding in the key criminological and criminal justice debates and enable you to develop research and study skills. Year 2 builds upon knowledge from Year 1 enhancing critical, analytical and research skills and providing focused study on one chosen module from a range of options. The extensive choice of modules offered in Year 3 provides an opportunity to specialise in more complex areas of the discipline, allowing expertise to be built up through in-depth study.

These are some of the questions you'll discuss on the course:

- What is 'crime', what are its causes and how does society respond to it?
- What part does the media play in fuelling fear of crime, creating moral panics and perpetuating prejudice?
- How should we deal with young people who offend?
- How can we explain an increase in the use of recreational drugs amongst young people?
- How are serious crimes, like human trafficking, organised?
- Why do people feel afraid when overall recorded crime rates have fallen consistently over the last decade?
- How can the police prevent crime?
- Does prison 'work'?
- Is there any evidence for the effectiveness of sentences delivered by our magistrates' and judges?
- What problems do we face in trying to research crime?

Through our links to relevant professions we provide you with opportunities to gain a real, practical insight into a range of different careers, preparing you for graduate employment. You will find this degree of particular value if you plan to work in the criminal justice system, local government, public services, social welfare, or the voluntary sector. All our graduates benefit from excellent training in transferable skills, strong research methods and data analytic skills. Skills development is embedded throughout our courses in order to prepare students for entry into a wide range of professions, within and outside the criminal justice system.

For those wishing to pursue their studies in criminology at a higher level we offer two internationally renowned postgraduate taught programmes which permit specialism in comparative criminology, security, organised crime, research methods, law and ethics.

Law with Criminology LLB (Hons) 3yrs UCAS Code M1M9

Building on the many links between the related disciplines of law and criminology, this Joint Honours course provides an integrated course that encourages students to approach topics from the viewpoint of both disciplines. Situated in The School of Law, students can take advantage of a unique joint-honours programme delivered in one interdisciplinary School. Many of our staff take a socio-legal approach to their research and teaching which is well suited to this course. This integrated approach allows us to provide a unique course taught by research active lawyers and criminologists. As a qualifying law degree, this course prepares you for a professional career in law, criminology and community justice.

Teaching and learning

The Criminology courses we offer are taught by research active staff, using interactive lectures, workshops and small-group seminar teaching. Students are supported in developing presentation, writing and debating skills through a diverse range of assessments. Each course unit is comprised of 30 taught hours over the semester and fully supported by Blackboard 9, our online teaching and learning interface. This provides a range of online learning resources and multimedia, discussion groups, quizzes, and electronic reading lists, as well as access to teaching materials and presentations. All lecturers and academic advisors have weekly feedback/drop-in hours, which provide students with the opportunity to meet on a one-to-one basis with specialist teaching staff to discuss their courses. Additional weekly in-session classes are offered to help students with their English language, research and essay-writing skills.

Extra-curricular activities

The student societies hosted by the school together with the common rooms facilities, opportunities for vocational work afforded by the School's Legal Advice Centre, and international student exchange programmes equip our students well with the skills, support and connections they need to enter a range of professions upon graduation.

MUCS (Manchester University Criminology Society)

Newly established in 2011, MUCS is a dedicated society for Criminology students aimed at providing our students with social events and sporting opportunities. Additional annual events include a field trip to Manchester Prison. MUCS works very closely with MULS (see below) and, indeed, organises many activities jointly. MUCS is a Society run by students for students. It adds to students' experiences of university life and helps create a vibrant community of students spanning the different intakes and year groups.

MULS (Manchester University Law Society)

MULS, sponsored by City and regional law firms, organises social and sporting events in conjunction with MUCS. Typical events include the Spring Ball, pub quizzes, a Halloween party and inter-School sports tournaments in football, rugby and netball. The Law School sports teams compete with other universities and frequently dominate the University League tables. Criminology students also get involved in the Debating Society, Streetlaw Society and other groups run by MULS.

Legal Advice Centre

Criminology students are offered the opportunity to work in the Law School's own Legal Advice Centre, providing supported advice to members of the public under the supervision of law practitioners and academics from the school.

Study abroad and internships

Criminology students have the opportunity to apply for a 'study-abroad' semester in the second-year of the BA Criminology program (currently Melbourne University in Australia, and in the USA at Arizona State University and Rutgers University, New Jersey). Details of the scheme are available here:

<http://www.law.manchester.ac.uk/undergraduate/studyabroad/studyabroad/>

Spending a semester abroad broadens your horizons and is a great way to meet and study with people in other countries who share your passions and interests. The experience of studying and living abroad develops your academic and personal skills, which increases your employability while also enabling you to travel and make new friends from all over the world.

Law with Criminology students have the opportunity to apply for summer internships in Malaysia and Singapore, carrying out pro-bono work and gaining experience in a growing economy.

Features of our courses:

- Taught by a research-active, interdisciplinary team with foundations in sociology, psychology, psychoanalysis, law, social work and probation practice
- 100% student satisfaction rate in the most recent National Student Survey, reflecting the dedication of our teaching staff and the enthusiasm of our students for their course
- Recent high-profile cases used to illustrate the topical issues we teach from youth justice and policing, terrorism and organised crime to drug use and victims
- A wide range of options in Year 3 allows you to specialise
- Impressive range of external speakers from criminal justice professions, academia, policy and voluntary organisations
- Focus on transferable skills, employability and careers advice to guide you through a wide variety of criminal justice and related careers
- An extensive programme of careers talks, workshops and panel sessions
- Opportunities to volunteer with criminal justice agencies, voluntary organisations and the Legal Advice Centre
- Field trips to relevant criminal justice and related locations including The Manchester Prison, Manchester Crown Court and MediaCityUK
- Active Criminology and Law Societies and regular meetings of the Criminology Film Club
- Opportunity to study abroad in one of our partner institutions or undertake summer internships
