

Jones Travelling Grants for PhD students

The Department of History at Manchester is fortunate to be able to offer support for doctoral students to travel in order to conduct research. The department hopes to make a number of awards of between £50 and £200. Applications will be judged in relation to their contribution to the successful completion of the research project.

The Thomas Edward Jones Travelling Grants were established in 1938 by a generous bequest set up to assist students to travel and conduct research.

This fund can be used to support both travel and accommodation for students to support research for their PhD thesis: for example to consult archives, conduct interviews or visit historic sites. All applications to the funds must be made using the attached form and you are advised to ask your supervisor to check your application before you submit. Unfortunately, due to the strict time constraints, late applications cannot usually be considered.

Please e-mail the form to: history.administrator@manchester.ac.uk or submit a paper copy to the History Office reception.

Application Form for Jones Travelling Grants for PhD students
2013-4

Deadline for applications: 22 November 2013

Surname	First name(s)
Email address	Student number
Source of funding	Year of study
Thesis topic or title
Thesis supervisor
Grant requested: £
Reason for request (briefly outline travel and research plans, 300 words max.)
Please provide a breakdown of the costs for which you are requesting a grant (you may include any type of public transport or travel by private car @ 30p per mile. You may also include accommodation costs where necessary).

Please state any other sources from which financial support has been sought. (If you are eligible for support from a funding body you are expected to approach them in the first instance).

Applicant's signature (not required for electronic submissions)

Date