Archival history	On 1 October 2007 the Commission for Racial Equality (CRE) merged with the Disability Rights Commission and the Equal Opportunities Commission to create the new Equality and Human Rights Commission (EHRC). The Ahmed Iqbal Ullah Race Relations Resource Centre was contacted by the EHRC in March 2008 offering the former library of the CRE as a donation. The collection was transferred to the University of Manchester in May 2008.
Administrative history	The Race Relations Act of 1965 was the first legislation relating to racial discrimination to be introduced in the United Kingdom. The Act led to the establishment of the Race Relations Board in 1966. The Race Relations Board was a statutory body appointed by the Home Secretary and assisted by regional conciliation committees composed of people who served in a voluntary capacity. The conciliation committees examined complaints of racial discrimination made under the Race Relations Act. The Race Relations Act was strengthened in 1968 to encompass the areas of employment and housing in relation to racial discrimination. The Community Relations Commission was established under the 1968 Act "to encourage the establishment of, and to assist others to take steps to secure the establishment of, harmonious community relations and to co-ordinate on a national basis the measures adopted for that purpose by others". The Commission was empowered by the Act to establish services for giving advice on community relations to local authorities and other local organisations, collecting information, providing training courses, and arranging and promoting conferences relating to community relations. The Community Relations Commission supported the work of local community councils in administrative and constitutional matters. The councils were independent bodies and worked with local groups to offer advice on community relations matters, and established sub-committees to deal with matters such as education, employment, housing and social welfare. The powers of the Race Relations Act were further extended by the creation of the 1976 Act. This followed the establishment of a Select Committee on Race Relations and Immigration which demonstrated the need for greater legal powers. The Race Relations Act of 1976 broadened the definition of discrimination to include indirect discrimination which disadvantaged a particular racial group. The Commission for Racial Equality (CRE) was created by the Race Relations Act of 1976, replacing the Race Relations Board. It commenced its work on 13 June 1977 and included former officers from the Race Relations Board and the Community Relations Commission. The CRE merged with the Disability Rights Commission and Equal
