

FLEXIBLE HONOURS

A new way to study subject combinations across a host of arts, languages and cultures disciplines.

Hello!

Because you have selected the University of Manchester for your future study, I want to draw your attention to Flexible Honours, an exciting scheme open to all Single Honours students in the School of Arts Languages and Cultures.

Our Flexible Honours scheme offers Single Honours students the opportunity to study an additional arts, languages or cultures subject as a Minor alongside your original Single Honours degree. This addition allows you to create a unique blend of knowledge, experience and transferable skills to broaden your profile.

Apart from the additional choices that Flexible Honours offers, the wonderful thing about the scheme is that it is truly flexible. At the end of your first year, you'll have the opportunity to reflect on your study experience so far and can choose at that point whether to continue with the Minor or to revert to your original Single Honours degree. If you choose to continue with the Flexible Honours programme for the duration of your degree programme, you can elect to have the Minor subject featured in your degree title.

If this sounds like the scheme for you, please register your interest via the survey link below. Please note that because all Flexible Honours combinations are subject to academic approval, availability and timetabling constraints, we ask that you select up to 3 in case your top choice is not available. If you need any further information, please email us at: flexhons.support@manchester.ac.uk

We look forward to welcoming you in September!

Digital Humanities

The Minor in Digital Humanities is a unique programme that complements your skills in a humanities discipline with training in digital methods and a deeper understanding of how digital technologies are shaping our lives and our future.

Over three years, you will explore various techniques like mapping, distant reading, and data visualization; reflect on digital media, politics, and culture – including questions of data ethics, race, gender, and sexuality; create and curate your own digital projects and exhibitions and develop specialist expertise in digital methods relating to your main subject area.

In the first year, you will follow an introductory core course that will touch on key concepts and debates on inequality in digital culture and allows you to create your own digital projects. In subsequent years, you will take units with a practical focus on technologies and skills. You will be able to complement these with a range of courses, including digital literary studies, the spatial humanities, data visualization, and computational and statistical methods.

With its combined focus on technical skills, creativity, and criticism, the programme will allow you to develop skills and the confidence needed to thrive in a variety of non-academic workplaces that need people who can bridge the gap between creative and technical work. Please note that no computational experience is required, as all training will be provided.

Our courses take place in the new Digital Humanities Lab, where students will also be provided with computers.

Egyptology

Egyptology is the study of the ancient Egyptian culture and history, as well as the reception and significance of the ancient Egyptian civilisation in more recent times.

From the unification of Egypt around 3500 BCE to the death of Cleopatra, Pharaonic Egypt was one of the longest-lived civilisations in human history, generating vast quantities of archaeological, textual and iconographic data, as well as a programme of monumental constructions stretching the length of the Nile Valley and beyond.

Our Minor in Egyptology is designed to provide you with an in-depth knowledge of the Pharaonic culture by drawing on the remains it left behind. You will study Egyptian history, learn Middle Egyptian hieroglyphs, read funerary monuments created by members of the Egyptian elite more than 4000 years ago and study the wealth of ancient Egyptian objects held in the collections of the Manchester Museum.

The Minor in Egyptology at The University of Manchester includes online and blended learning units, which offer additional flexibility.
