Jean Jenkins is a Reader in Employment Relations at Cardiff University. Her research interest in industrial relations in the garment sector began in the UK in the 1990s and she has followed the global value chain in garments to its new locations where local labour relations are a crucial factor in controlling costs. In this seminar, entitled 'The Struggle for Remedy and Rights' she will speak about the international supply chain in garment assembly, focusing on the methods of control employed at the workplace and the continuing struggles facing workers in securing the most basic of employment rights.
