

HSTM and UCIL
20092 | 20592

The Crisis of Nature

issues in environmental history

How do societies produce waste, define risk and sustainability, and conceptualise cleanliness?

Crisis of Nature explores fundamentals of environmental history to provide an introduction to environmental activism and policy, using case studies from the twentieth-century environmental history: ocean crisis, extinction, plastic, health, disasters, climate and food security. It examines the cultural and economic histories of 'nature', and their relation to the emergence of risk society and the politics of environment.

Vladimir Janković

Centre for the History of Science,
Technology and Medicine

Simon Building 2.22

vladimir.jankovic@manchester.ac.uk