

Use and availability of Zoom for 20/21 academic year

We understand a small number of colleagues have raised concerns around the availability and use of Zoom in China for teaching. In addition, the availability of Zoom going forwards for UoM has been raised, so we are keen to clarify the situation as we now know it.

China is the second highest user base for the UoM Zoom license and there are sometimes hundreds of meetings per day involving hosts and participants in mainland China without issue. However, there have been a small number of reports of some users experiencing connection difficulties.

We have been liaising with Zoom about these reports and a new feature has been enabled as a result. Going forward, users in China who are experiencing any connection issues will be able to choose to allow traffic to be routed through local Chinese data centres which should improve stability. Details can be found here. China and Singapore may not be selected by default, but can now be manually selected.

We also asked Zoom for clarification regarding the vendor model in China and have been provided with the following.

The connectivity in China isn't changing, just the model that users in China can purchase Zoom. Users with billing addresses in Mainland China cannot directly purchase services from Zoom and they must switch to a white label Zoom partner in order to continue to use our video conferencing services.

Unfortunately a lot of our users suffer from poor Wi-Fi connections wherever they are. We believe that some of the connectivity issues that have been experienced, along with some of the misunderstandings of the changing vendor model has led some colleagues to believe that Zoom would no longer be available for students and colleagues based in China. We'd like to assure you that this absolutely is not the case.

We'd also like to confirm that the University has committed to Zoom's availability going forwards as a business-critical tool.

If you become aware of issues with connections in China (or elsewhere), please provide the Media Services Team, via mediaservices@manchester.ac.uk with details such as the affected host/participant's email address or preferably the meeting ID, and they will endeavour to help. They can also set up test meetings to assist with any issues you may be experiencing.

Trevor Byrne, Head of Media Services, and Dan George, Associate Vice President (Blended and Flexible Learning)