GRADUATE PROFILE

NAME: Ahmed Mughni

COURSE: MA Social Anthropology

YEAR OF GRADUATION: 2017

ROLE: Research Associate

EMPLOYER: Planning & Development Department, Government of Sindh, Pakistan

INTERVIEW

Hi Ahmed! Please tell us a bit about why you chose to study Social Anthropology at Manchester?

I chose to study Social Anthropology at UoM because of its world class faculty and its cutting-edge research in various fields. With hindsight, I'd also add that Manchester is such a vibrant city which has shades of both fast urban city and beautiful natural countryside.

And tell us a bit about your career since graduating?

Soon after graduation I started my career in research for a USAID funded project, the Sindh Reading Program. I then started to teach Sociology and Social Change at a university in Pakistan. Currently, I work as a Research Associate for the Research & Training wing of the Planning and Development Department of the Government of Sindh, where I assist in the formulation of the provincial government.

How did your course set you up for your career path?

Modules such as 'Anthropology of International Aid and Development' sparked an interest in the development sector. In addition to this, reading about topics of Medical Anthropology also created an interest to pursue an advanced degree in Medical Anthropology.

What was the most surprising takeaway from your course that's helped you in later life?

I value the analytical skills that I gained through my degree the most. After completing my course, I started to see the world from a different perspective - I credit my MA course for sharpening my analytical skills.

What advice would you give to a student looking to start your course and/or join the University?

Anthropology at Manchester is very interesting with its first-class faculty and students from diverse backgrounds, but there's so much more to studying at Manchester, too. I would advise them to participate in different events with their fellow students and explore life at university to form everlasting friendships. And do visit the serene Peak District and Alderley Edge!

After completing my course, I started to see the world from a different perspective - I credit my MA course for sharpening my analytical skills.
