YEAR OF GRADUATION: 2021

ROLE: Programmes Officer
EMPLOYER: Cyber Careers

INTERVIEW

Hi Lisa! Tell us a bit about why you chose to study the MA in Human Rights at Manchester?

I had studied at UoM for my undergraduate degree in Politics and Modern History and really enjoyed the political side of it so decided to pursue a Master's. I thought that the modules available with this course, such as the ethics of killing, would be potentially insightful and engaging topics, so I decided to study the MA in Human Rights.

And tell us a bit more about your career?

My role involves working to demystify careers in the Cyber Security sector. I fell into it accidentally, though I thoroughly enjoyed my first-ever full-time role as an intern at the University, where I learned that I'd love to pursue a career in outreach, working with a range of people.

How did your MA set you up for your career path?

Although there isn't necessarily an obvious link between my postgraduate degree and career path, my master's helped me develop many skills that are necessary for my job role, such as research skills, communicating with many different audiences and writing skills, to name a few.

What was the most surprising takeaway from your degree?

I think what surprised me most is how broad Human Rights can be and how they can be interpreted, discussed and implemented. I've also enjoyed learning, so being able to dive deep into all things to do with Human Rights was exciting.

What advice would you give to a new student about to start a postgraduate degree at Manchester?

Make sure that you keep up the momentum with your studies. It can be difficult to write a dissertation during the summer holidays, but just carry on going and you'll be really proud of yourself with the end result!

My master's helped me develop many skills that are necessary for my job role, such as research skills, communicating with many different audiences and writing skills, to name a few.
