A degree in BA Social Sciences from The University of Manchester allows you to tailor your learning to your interests with units across a broad range of subjects.

“ By studying at Manchester, you are able to explore a variety of subjects that interest you. For example, even though I am a Politics and Social Anthropology student, I have been able to take some modules in Criminology. You take a mixture of compulsory modules that allow you to learn the foundations of your specialised subjects, whilst still having the opportunity to study material that is interesting and relevant to you. ”

Lilly Cheetham, Politics and Social Anthropology (BASS) student
